ABSTRACT

An information system that includes mechanisms for assigning incoming access transactions to individual access subsystems based on an analysis of the incoming access transactions. The analysis and assignment of the incoming access transactions may be used to minimize loss of cached data during power reduction in an information system.